The present invention relates to a light-emitting device and a method of manufacturing the same. In recent years, an organic light-emitting device including an organic compound as a light-emitting material has attracted attention as a light-emitting device that provides high-speed response to input signals and is excellent in viewing angle and contrast. As a method of manufacturing an organic light-emitting device, there has been known a method including forming a metal electrode on a substrate (e.g., a glass substrate) to which a plurality of organic light-emitting elements are attached, and sealing the substrate with a sealing material (see, for example, Patent Document 1). In order to reduce variation in light-emitting property or the like occurring due to a reaction between the sealing material and the organic light-emitting element, it has been considered to provide a barrier layer made of a material which hardly reacts with an organic material such as a metal oxide between the sealing material and the organic light-emitting element. This configuration has been proposed by, for example, Patent Documents 2 and 3. A metal oxide semic
