In the US, the number of people with diabetes continues to increase. Most types of diabetes cause complications and can be life threatening. The largest group of people with diabetes is the age 65 and over population. The main cause of blindness and amputation in this age group is diabetic retinopathy. The complications and mortality of people with diabetes is greater with more advanced disease. One of the key contributors to vision loss in diabetes is diabetic retinopathy. Diabetic retinopathy is a leading cause of new blindness in the US and in most western countries. Diabetic retinopathy is one of the major causes of blindness in the Western countries. This research project will provide the key predictors of the severity and spread of diabetic retinopathy. The impact of these predictors on the outcome of diabetic retinopathy will be tested using two different natural experiments. For one of the natural experiments, the New England Medical Center Hospital Eye Center is an ideal setting, because it has a previous extensive epidemiological study of diabetic retinopathy, the Quality Assessment in Eye Care Study II, in patients with diabetes. The retinal data from this study are available for the current study, because over 99% of the patients have complete retinal data. For the second natural experiment, we have a unique ability to offer patients with diabetes a standard of care that is planned, organized and documented. This new entity is a diabetes clinic in which most of the patients are followed in an eye clinic. We will establish the most critical parameters to predict the development, progression, and the response to intervention of diabetic retinopathy, while at the same time comparing outcomes among patients in this new clinic to outcomes of those in other eye clinics in which patients with diabetes are referred to for management of diabetic retinopathy. The fundus images (both color and fluorescein fundus photographs) will be collected during the first visit at the beginning of the study. All patients will be followed prospectively at 12 month intervals for two years. During the first year, we will collect several parameters that are currently considered to be predictors of diabetic retinopathy including the presence of proliferative diabetic retinopathy, the stage of retinopathy, type of treatment, and the amount and duration of diabetes. The second year, we will repeat the measures as well as collect new data. New data will include a set of novel parameters developed in our laboratory based on our own work and the work of others including an electronic fundus photo imaging system that will permit measurement of retinal nerve

What's New In?

* Rectangular Marquee: This tool gives you a rectangular selection for moving or copying an image. *

* Flood Fill: Flood Fill displays, copies or erases the pixels that are the same color as a selected color. If you select the pixels you want to be erased, those pixels are replaced with the color of the pixels on the top layer. For example, if you select a brown color, the pixels on the top layer that have the same brown color are erased. *

* Colorize: This feature lets you correct an image color by inserting color in the part of an image that needs to be corrected. *

* Local Adjustments: The Local Adjustments tools are useful for making quick color corrections on a single part of a photo. They use a smart RGB eyedropper tool to select the color from the image and adjust it. *

* Adjustment Layers: This tool has a limited range of features; however, you can layer a number of adjustments and effects to do the most complicated work. You can apply a combination of rules to the image for different effects. After using these tools, it's a good idea to edit the images by using the Retouching options discussed in the next section.
