Q: How to implement "unfollow" feature in twitter? How to implement in this kind of layout the right side item "followed by you" by clicking on it?. When I remove it from my database, I remove it from the listview of followed. Is a simple button in a line of the row item where I click "follow"? A: You can achieve this with a couple of simple checkboxes. ... Unfollow Follow S("#follow_checkbox").click(function () { if ($("#follow_checkbox").is(':checked') { //follow the account } else { //unfollow } }); It's as simple as that. You could then also use the default Twitter UI (e.g. for search) to display the currently followed user's (on your UI) profile. Q: Defining elasticsearch query which uses mltiple labels or attribute filters I want to add an attribute filter to the below query, to make sure that only the documents which have a specified tag (or tags) are returned. The number of tags is not defined at this moment. The question is, do I

Devon Girl Scout Program hires new leadership By CINDY SALZMAN, P-I REPORTERPublished: April 27, 2013 6:00AM DEVON - The second-to-last day of the National Council Summer Leadership Institute, "Champion of Service to Youth - A Leader's Journey," started with icebreaker games designed to bring the 20 participants together. Getting to know her fellow participants, the day continued with a panel discussion on women in leadership, followed by a visit to the Seattle Aquarium's Sea Otter exhibit. The final day included what the Girl Scouts call "leadership exercises," designed to help the young women tap into their "internal superpower" and share it with others. Although it is not required that the participants be Girl Scout leaders, it was agreed at the beginning that it would be beneficial to have them follow the leadership model of working toward something they want to see in the world. The method used was one that works well in "transformative practices," as the girls call them. Each of the exercises began with an activity that allowed everyone to draw out and share what they were passionate about. These activities then set the stage for six "leadership exercises," which are intended to allow the girls to put themselves in other people's shoes. It is important, the girls said, to understand how to lead other people. Tricia Wallace, the District Executive from the Sierra Cascade Council, said at the beginning of the Leadership Institute that this year, the Council has brought in two Girl Scout professional development specialists. "They're really committed to investing in training and ongoing training," Wallace said. "This is a group that really wants to learn and wants to invest in themselves." During the session, Wallace said the girls also learned about the importance of promoting the charter of the Girl Scouts of the USA, where girls and adults can come together to promote the ideals of the organization, specifically "that every girl can be all that she can be." At the end of the session, there was a final exercise. "When you're with your group, you should be continuously talking to your group, and you should be using your power of communication," one of the leadership consultants said to the girls. "You don't have to be in a loud place, or do it dramatically. Take a moment of silence when you're with your friends, and talk to them." The councils have already
