When launching the application, you will be presented with a dialog which displays the version number of your currently selected TypeScript compiler. You may select a specific TypeScript version by selecting from the dropdown list. If your TypeScript version is installed on your computer, TscMon will inform you which TypeScript compiler was used to compile the current version of your TypeScript program. You may also configure TscMon to launch when you start the application. TscMon detects which version of TypeScript is installed on your computer by searching for a file named tsconfig.json in the C:\Users*.appdata\Local folder.
