The latest issue of Pokemon GO Magazine includes a free color poster featuring an illustration of a Pokemon wearing a tokkakutsu, the ceremonial costume worn by Japanese police officers. The original illustration was created by YouTube user KulaOtaku, who has published videos starring Pikachu from the Nintendo Game Boy. The Pikachu from Pokemon GO, on the other hand, was drawn by artist Hidenori Shiratori, who has worked on another edition of the GO Magazine and is best known for his illustrations of the magical creatures of Lavos. Pokemon GO Game-icon and Pal Park versions of the Pikachu in the GO Magazine illustration are available for preorder at Premium Bandai for 4,960 yen (US$40). Charles is a great addition to the team and will be joining us at the beginning of January. Previously he was the CTO at Optify and the previous CTO of Credit Karma. — Charles Docker: February 1st at Clupé at 9:00am EST Charles Docker will be the host of a talk at Clupé titled: Web Application Attack Detection – Beyond Onsite Relying on on-site incident response teams to detect and mitigate application exploits can be slow and ineffective for two reasons. Firstly the attacks that application defenders are looking for are often not routine internal exploits, but rather more sophisticated, targeted and stealthy exploits that require a broader perspective in order to detect. And secondly, even when attackers are detected and an exploit is identified, it may be very difficult and time consuming to put in place an effective patch. In this talk we will provide a brief overview of recent web application exploit detection techniques, including: Web Application Exploit Metrics Web Application Attack Detection (Web Application Guard) Web Application Attack Detection (Web Application Fire 6d1f23a050
